MISCELLANEOUS READING. THE LOVE KNOT .- BY NORA PERRY Tying her bonnet under her chin, She tied her raven ringlets in. But not alone in the silken snare

Did she catch her lovely floating hair,

For, tying her bonnet under her chin, She tied a young man's heart within. They were strolling together up the hill, Where the wind comes blowing merry and chill; And it blew the cur s a trolicsome race, All over the happy peach-colored face, Till, scolding and laughing, she tied them in,

Under her beautiful, dimpled chin. And it blew a color, bright as the bloom Of the pinkest fuschia's tossing plume, All over the cheeks of the prettiest girl That ever imprisoned a romping curl. Or, in tying her bonnet under her chin, Tied a young man's heart within. Steeper and steeper grew the hill-

The western wind blew down and played

Madder, merrier, chillier still

The wildest tricks with the little maid. As, tying her bonnet under her chin, She tied a young man's heart within. Oh, western wind do you think it was fair, To play such tricks with her floating hair? To gladly, gleefully do your best

To blow her against the young man's breast

Where he as gladly folded her in, And kissed her mouth and dimpled chin? Oh, Ellery Vane, you little thought, An hour ago when you besought This country lass to walk with you After the sun had dried the dew, What perilous danger you'd be in.

As she tied her bonnet under her chin,

THE WORD "HOME." A Frenchman in Philadelphia, writing to our French contemporary here, is quite in-dignant with the learned of the Auglo-Saxon race who boast of possessing in the English language some words which have no equivalents in the French. He says that this is nothing to brag of, for the French can, in their turn, mention a number of French words which it is equally impossible to express in English by exact synonyms. He is particularly offended by the frequent assertion that there is no such word as home in the French language. We translate: -Balt Am. "The Saxon substantive heim, whence the English derive home, has exactly the same signification as the Latin words mansio, domus, ca sa, roots of the French words maison, domicile, chez-soi, which we also sometimes extend to the idea of family, household, country. If the English have given to their word home a larger meaning than we accord to our three French words, it is a mark of the poverty rather than of the richness of the English language. In fact, since we have in French words appropriate to every shade of meaning represented by the English home why should we not prefer to avail ourselves of them, as well for variety of sounds as to give more clearness and precision to our language! For example, whilst the Englishman expresses indifferently by his word home ideas more or less distinct, the Frenchman gives to his idea of his family dwelling house the names of maison, domicile, case, when, he alludes to the contents of that habitation, he uses the words menage familie, foyer, tost paternel, chez-moi, etc. my GOODS in respect to quality and price, is when he speaks of the place where his domicil is, he then says le sol, le pays natal, la ville natale, mon pays, etc. And by extension ma patrie, patria terra, when his ideas embrace the entire nationality. I then assert here, in paren thesis, that the English do not possess one word s) nonymous with that noble epithet, ma patric! Each language has its riches and its peculiar
